NOTE.

THE principal object in making the following collection has been to compare the characters of the Skull in the different races of men, and these again with the skulls of the lower animals, and especially with reference to the internal capacity of the cranium, as indicative of the size of the brain. The Proprietor has much pleasure in expressing his acknowledgments, in the following pages, to those gentlemen who have aided his researches in this department of science, and respectfully invites their further aid in extending and completing the series.

This collection is deposited in the Museum of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, where it may be seen, free of charge, on the afternoons of Tuesdays and Saturdays throughout the year.

59. SKULL of PEIRCE, a convict and Cannibal, who was executed in New South Wales in 18—. A letter addressed to me by Wm. Cobb Hurry Esq. of Calcutta, contains the following particulars of this man's singular career. "With regard to the Cannibal Pierce, all that is known of him is, that he was a native of Scotland or the north of Ireland, and a seaman. He was a convict in Van Diemen's Land, and escaped with others into the woods. Hunger compelled them to prey upon each other, till only Pierce and another were left. A romantic tale might be made from Pierce's own narrative of the feelings with which these two men watched each other, till, overcome with fatigue, the last of the band fell a victim. Pierce was relieved by a party who fell in with him, and the cannibalism of which he had been guilty being attributed to necessity, was not punished. From that time his propensities acquired their full development, and he succeeded repeatedly in persuading his fellow prisoners to escape with him, for the sole purpose of killing them and devouring their flesh. He used to return secretly to the depot, and persuade a fresh victim that he had been sent by others who were waiting in the woods. He was at last caught; and being asked if he knew where one of his companions was, deliberately pulled an arm out of his jacket and shewed it to the soldiers. Mr. Crockett, from whom I had this account, and who gave me the skull, is the

The only New Holland Skull I have seen was in the possession of Mr. Combe. It gave a facial angle of 79° - Forehead low and narrow; posteriorly full, especially above the meatus of the ear to the parietal protuberance. A strongly marked ridge for the temporal muscle. (Jan. 1839.)
